100 Brilliant Color Combinations

And How to Apply Them..... to Your Designs

#5EB8DB

A dark, atmospheric photograph of a forest. In the foreground, a path or clearing is covered with fallen pine needles and small twigs. Several tall, thin pine trees stand in the background, their branches bare or sparsely needled. The overall mood is moody and natural.

Fresh greenery and colorful blossoms make springtime a welcome sight after a long winter. This color palette features bright shades of green and coral that will make your design pop. These types of colors might be used for a spring- or summer-season event poster or perhaps an advertisement that wants to come across as fresh and youthful.

Red and blue are some of the most common colors that businesses use for branding, and for good reason. Red says “confident and powerful,” while blue says “calming and trustworthy.” This palette offers a little bit of both, with slightly desaturated shades that aren’t overpowering. To the conservative blue and gray hues, the brick red shade adds a burst of extra color that is still professional. This would work well in any corporate context or for a more “serious” design project.

Iceland's natural beauty is legendary, and this palette tries to capture its dramatic contrasts. The warm, grayish undertones of the top two colors contrast nicely with the cooler greens. A range of lighter and darker shades makes it easy to combine any two or three of the colors and have them still complement each other.

Monochromatic color schemes (made up of the various tints, tones, or shades of one color) are extremely versatile. While this palette may not qualify as monochromatic according to the technical definition, for visual purposes, it creates a similar effect. With a color as multipurpose as blue, this combination could be used just about anywhere.

HOW TO USE REFRESHING & PRETTY

Crisp turquoise hues set off bright yellow and bubblegum pink for a palette almost reminiscent of Easter candy. If the pink makes the palette too “girly” for your design’s purposes, just leave it out and opt for the top two aqua shades plus the yellow for a bright, clean combination.

HOW TO USE ICY BLUES & GRAYS

Contrasting warm grays with cool, glacial blues makes for a dynamic color scheme that's more visually interesting than your average combination of drab blues and grays. If you're in need of a palette that's more restrained, instead of opting for navy and dark gray, try these lighter, brighter hues.

The muted shades of this color scheme have a vintage vibe, with the light aqua and gold particularly being colors that were popular in the 1950s and 60s. But that doesn't mean this combination looks dated. These colors (and the mid-century modern aesthetic in general) have seen a resurgence in popularity and still look stylish.

This combination has an outdoor feel to it, like a summer baseball game: you have the red dirt of the baseball diamond, the green grass in the outfield, the bright sun in a blue sky overhead. However, it's more subtle (and has more variety of color) than, say, the more obvious greens and browns in #6.

Red and green is one of three pairs of complementary (or opposite) colors on the traditional color wheel; others include orange/blue and violet/yellow. When combined, these colors make a striking, high-contrast impression that can be a little jarring if you don't use them carefully. That's why, for this palette, the reds and greens have been balanced and toned down (not full saturation like the red and green you see on Christmas decorations) for a fresher twist on a complementary color palette.

Warm grays with a pop of golden yellow is a combination you'll see sometimes in interior design and home décor contexts. It's primarily neutral (and the warmth of the grays feels calming and inviting) but the yellow adds some cheerfulness and energy for an overall palette that's refined but not stuffy.

Dark wood, leather, old books — things you might find in an English pub or one of those gentlemen's clubs you see in old movies. If your design could use some suave sophistication, try out this combination of rich browns plus a lighter, smoky neutral shade.
